

Pulsar delivers wireless broadband Internet service to small towns in northern California. The single biggest obstacle to delivering our service is signal blockage due to trees. Opening up unlicensed frequencies below 900MHz would dramatically expand the number of users able to receive a service they want and need.